Areas of Poverty and Minority Concentration

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) conducted an experiment called Moving to Opportunity (MTO) Demonstration and found that families who lived longer in neighborhoods with lower poverty and higher education levels did achieve better outcomes in work and school, as well as in health.

The maps provided below identify areas of poverty and minority concentration.
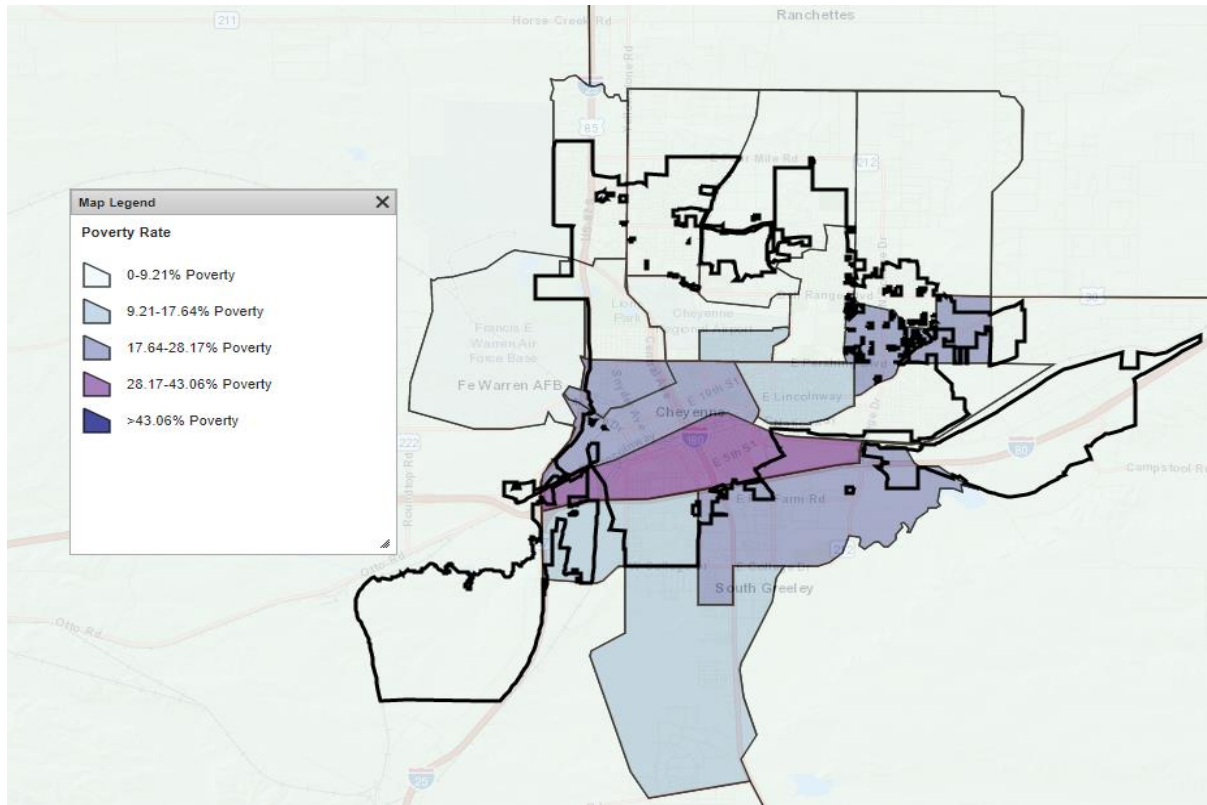

High-Opportunity Neighborhood Definitions:

- High-work and -income neighborhoods: census tracts with poverty rates below 15 percent
- Predominantly white neighborhoods: tracts where the non-Hispanic white share of the population exceeds 70 percent.

Characteristics of High-Opportunity Neighborhoods:

- Job opportunities
- Schools
- Transportation
- Other services

High-opportunity neighborhoods are predominately found North of E. Pershing Blvd. and West of N. College Dr. as well as West of I-25 and East of Whitney rd.
